

Historic Barn Gets New Roof

after

A barn located on the Tiller Ranger Station grounds recently received a new roof to protect it from northwestern rain and moss. The barn, which was originally built to stable up to seven horses, is on the National Register of Historic Places, and it is currently being used for general storage. The work was performed by Humbert Building, Inc., of Myrtle Creek, Oregon (near Roseburg). The project was funded by Title II of the Secure Rural Schools and Community Self-Determination Act, which provides employment opportunities for local citizens on programs that improve, repair, or restore facilities and resources on public lands.
